

Provincial Protected Area Boundary Adjustments 2004-2022

Provincial Protected Area Boundary Adjustments: 2004 to 2022

This report describes provincial protected area boundary adjustments that have occurred since 2004.

Our records currently indicate that since 2004, there have been 86 modifications to remove land from protected area boundaries, totalling approximately 4,133 hectares.¹ This equates to less than 0.03 percent of the total area within the provincial protected areas system.

These boundary adjustments have included removing existing highways and public roads from parks, and authorizing highway improvements, access roads, transmission lines and pipelines. In some cases, lands removed from an area were protected under another designation (e.g., Class A park to protected area under Environment and Land Use Act). This total also includes boundary modifications to correct errors in which lands were inadvertently included in protected area boundaries (details of the boundary adjustments are in the table below).

Although the “category” system of boundary adjustments was not adopted until 2010, BC Parks has attempted to indicate which category would have been assigned for adjustments occurring prior to 2010.

47 of the 86 boundary modifications are considered “category 1” under the policy, dealing with corrections to administrative errors in park boundaries. These types of modifications have resulted in 3,384.98 hectares² being removed from parks, conservancies, ecological reserves and protected areas.

24 of the 86 boundary modifications are considered “category 2” under the policy, or adjustments to deal with human health and safety issues such as highway re-alignments and community infrastructure such as water supplies. These types of modifications have resulted in 109.09 hectares being removed from parks.

15 of the 86 boundary modifications are considered “category 3” under the policy, or adjustments where a proponent is interested in a development or activity not allowed under protected area legislation. These types of modifications have resulted in 639 hectares being removed from parks and conservancies.

² Of this amount, approximately 73.8% (2,499 ha) is attributed to one protected area change where lands from Gladys Lake Ecological Reserve that included trails and recreation activities were removed and added to Spatsizi Plateau Wilderness Park.
